Twin Chimneys Stone Street Westenhanger CT21 4HS

Located on Stone Street between Westenhanger station and Newingreen, this fine old house has many historical features. The house is predominantly constructed of brick in English Bond which would have been typical of the time, but some of the later alterations to the south elevation show a Flemish Bond construction. The roof is Kent Pegged.

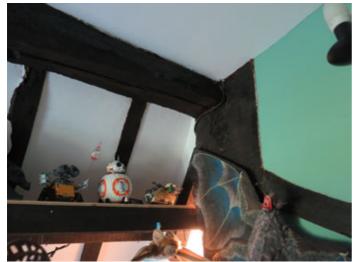

The presence of apotropaic marks on certain timbers interests me. I believe that these were in general a medieval phenomenon, and if so could pre-date the main building?

Apotropaic Marks

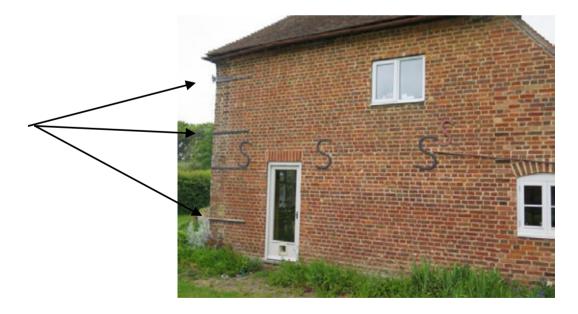

The elevation to the north would seem to be structured as an aisle (wherein is the kitchen) if one looks upward from the kitchen the main wall continues up to the rafters. I would assume that this is all built at the same time as the main house and not added later.

The aisle to the north elevation looking upwards from the kitchen floor

Another point on the construction, or should I say construction problems is the shift in the roof; particularly effecting the east elevation whereby the east wall has been braced to the south elevation and strengthened with tie rods.

The east wall. The arrows show bracing to the south wall. Note also the 'S' ended tie rods

Historically, so I have read, houses with tie beams lengthwise do have a tendency to shift. The general roof construction appears to be of an arch brace design. This post-dates many earlier Kent houses that would have had a crown post adjoining a main cross tie beam by way of tie beam braces.

I think that looking at the structure from inside that some purlins may have been added at a later date, rendering some of the original purlins redundant. The new purlins have braces at intervals, joining them to the central tie beam.

It would be interesting to try and establish the origins of roman style brickwork and, question as to whether this original outer wall? Could the elevation to the west be a later extension? I am led to believe that it was practice to poach material from old ruins before the country had the logistical means to transport materials from further afield, including Roman ruins. If the wall in the house is original and these bricks were Roman, then this could be a whole new concept in that it could place the building as that of special archaeological interest.

This country house was built in 1719 is built of brick and stone under a tiled roof. The entrance through a tiled porch leads into a small room, in which the inner wall is of roughly coursed ragstone, and old brick of roman design and colour with rough mortar. It is not clear whether this rustic style wall was built at the same time as the main house or was an earlier structure.

Adjoining the entrance room is a small scullery wherein the aforementioned original wall continues. A small foundation plaque in the form of a brick bears the date the house was built.

Interestingly the pink diagonal on the 1842 tithe map could be the S.E. Railway under construction, which, according to Wikipedia reached Folkestone by 1843.

ELEVEN FIGHTING SONS.

The above picture is probably unique. It contains the photos of a married couple and their family of thirteen. Of the twelve cons eleven have served or are now serving in the Army or Navy. Eight are serving at the present time; and of the others three have completed their time, and two of the three have attested again.

The parents are Mr. and Mrs. Palmer, of the Chimneys, Westenhanger, where they have fived for twenty-five years. During all that time the husband has worked as wagoner and carter on the Hillhurst Farm, first under Mr. G. F. Deedes, and now under Mr. Walker. The daughter is married to Mr.Law, a signalman, and they live at Belveders. The names of those in the picture, glancing across from left to right, are as follows:—Herbert Palmer (served formerly); Charles Palmer (served formerly); Walter Palmer, Sergeant, 7th Dragoon Guards (now serving); Matchall Palmer, A.S.C. (now serving in France).

John Palmer, "Buffs" (killed in action, January 19th, 1916); Frank Palmer, Stoker, H.M.S. Magnolia; Albert Palmer.

Victor Palmer, Civil Service Rifles (now serving); Elizabeth Palmer (now Mrs. Law); Victor Palmer, Civil Service Rifles (now serving); Benjamin Palmer, 4th "Buffs" (now serving) ing).
