Margaret Elizabeth Mary Hamilton nee Cragg was born in Stoke Damarel, Devon, the eldest daughter of John Cragg, a Captain in the Royal Navy, and his wife Margaret. She married Thomas Bramston Hamilton there in 1864. She travelled with him as his military postings took him round the UK, to Ireland, Shorncliffe, Sheerness and finally to Bitterne in Hampshire. They had eleven children. According to her daughter Ethel, when asked to dissuade her son Patrick from taking up flying she replied "no one's personal feelings ought ever to interfere with any man's career provided it was an upright and honourable one to follow." Her husband died in the Boer War, as did her sons Alastair, Ernest and Kenneth, and on Patrick's death, she received a letter from George V, offering his condolences on her multiple losses. As a widow, she lived in Hythe, at The Old Manor House in Hillside Road, where she remained until her death.

Patrick Hamilton was the tenth child and youngest son of of Thomas Bramston and Margaret Elizabeth Mary Hamilton nee Cragg. He was born at Bitterne Grove in Bitterne, Hampshire, in June 1882. He joined the British Army, and by the age of nineteen was a 2nd Lieutenant in the Light Infantry. He served in India, and on his return on leave in 1911 took flying lessons. With a friend, he then sailed for the United States, taking two planes with them. He survived an accident in Mexico, in which his plane fell 100ft. On his return to the UK in 1912, he obtained his flying certificate, and joined the Royal Flying Corps, which had been formed that year. On 6 September he and his observer took off in his Deperdussin monoplane from an airfield in Berkshire as part of a large military exercise. Shortly afterwards, the engine cut out, the pilot was unable to control the plane, which started to disintegrate, and both Patrick and his observer were killed in the ensuing crash. A memorial to them both was raised near the village of Willian in Hertfordshire, and there is also a memorial in Worcester Cathedral. They were among the first members of the RFC to die while flying.

Hilda Blanche Moss nee Hamilton was the fourth child of Thomas Bramston Hamilton and Margaret Elizabeth Mary Hamilton, and was born in Sandgate. She married Robert Miles C. Moss in the town in 1899. She died in the local area
